

Dear My Forever Best Friend,

It's a reminder of all the years we've walked together—from school benches to big dreams.

When I think about our school days, I don't remember just classrooms or exams. I remember laughter without reason, conversations without effort, and a bond that never needed explanations. We never tried too hard to stay close—it just happened naturally. That's the kind of friendship people search for, but we were lucky enough to live it.

We always used to say in school that even after school, we would stay in touch and keep talking. Back then, we never truly understood the weight of those words. We only realized their meaning when life happened and reality slowly stepped in. Once our paths separated, we understood that not everyone remains the same—and that's okay. That's when we started learning how friendships really work. Friendship is not always about putting constant effort to keep someone in your life; sometimes, it's about being apart and still never changing.

Friendship is the most beautiful thing I have experienced in my entire life. I don't exactly know how it works, but somehow, we were always there for each other in every phase of life. We shared our laughter, our gossip stories, and our love stories. We handled tough times in a funnier way, turned stress into jokes, supported each other silently, stayed up late talking about random dreams, and stood strong even when life felt uncertain. We celebrated each other's success as if it were our own. Everything changed. We grew in our own ways, and we learned a lot along the journey. But one thing never changed—our ideas and our vision about the future. We talked about so many dreams. Sometimes we wanted to become gamers, sometimes YouTubers 😂. Back then, it all felt fun and random. But day by day, life made me realize something—it was real.

After 12th, our paths completely separated. But life has its own magic, right? You know exactly what I'm talking about. The people around me always know about you, about us, and about our vision. At first, life made me believe in both of us. Later, the people around me also started believing in us.

Just remember one thing—you already know this. I've seen something from the future. It's bright... so much brighter. We are going to build something big, very big. Until then, hold on to the things that teach you, shape you, and make you stronger.

Anyway, happy birthday, Muthu. 🎉❤️

No matter where life takes us, this bond will always remain the same.

We always live life moving forward, but it only makes sense when we look at it in reverse. Let's see what the future holds for us—and let's build it stronger and brighter.
